Non-Verbal* Communication

You may not use words when you do non-verbal communication, but you say a lot. Whether we want to or not, we are always sending messages. These messages are sent by body language: facial expressions, eye contact, gestures, posture, and how much space we put between others and ourselves. [ ⓐ ] the old saying goes, even silence speaks louder than words.

We use gestures, facial expressions, and tone of voice to punctuate our words. The words "thank you" can have a sarcastic* meaning if said in a flat voice. Even when we do not know the meaning of a word, we can guess the meaning through nonverbal context.

We express our emotions more by the way we act [ © ] what we say. We cannot control all our non-verbal communication. For example, some people are "bad liars" because their body language shows that they are not being honest. Some people blush when they are embarrassed or surprised. A noisy stomach might tell others that we are [ @ ].

On the other hand, non-verbal communication can be the cause of miscommunication if people "read" the signals wrong. Someone may shiver from being cold, not from fear. While people from every culture use gestures, the meanings of the gestures are not universal. Giving eye contact might be important in one culture, but  $_{\textcircled{e}}$  rude in another. Silence can have many meanings: I understand, I don't understand, I'm angry, or I'm thinking.
